Bond Authors Legislation for Homeless Opportunity Project Worth $50 Million

Supporting Atlanta's Most Vulnerable Citizens

Councilmember Michael J. Bond was proud to author the legislation behind the City of Atlanta's recent major step toward eradicating homelessness. In July 2017, the Atlanta City Council authorized Invest Atlanta to issue its revenue bonds to fund the new Homeless Opportunity Project, a massive three-year effort to reduce underemployment, unemployment and resulting homelessness in Atlanta. The $26 million bond from Invest Atlanta will be added to a $25 million donation from the United Way of Greater Atlanta. Over the next three years, the $50 million in funds will be used to create 364 new homeless shelter beds, provide 254 homeless youths with housing interventions, and provide permanent homes for 500 homeless individuals and 300 homeless families.

"It reaffirms solidly the city's commitment to dealing with the issues of the homeless," said Bond. "This signals to them that they are not forgotten and that they are priority of this government."

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development reports that in recent years, Atlanta has decreased the number of homeless individuals by 52 percent. However, according to anti-homelessness nonprofit Partners for Home, over 3,500 men, women and children in Atlanta are still in need of shelter.

The ordinance authorizing the project, which was sponsored by Councilmember Bond, was approved unanimously by the city council.

"It reintegrates these people back into the fabric of our society," Bond told the Atlanta Journal Constitution. "I think warehousing is an outdated concept. Sometimes that works if we are looking for a central place to provide services, but we want people to come back into the fold of the whole society."

"We now have the opportunity to end chronic homelessness in our city, and ensure that all women, men and children – regardless of circumstance – have the chance to live stable, meaningful lives and participate fully in their communities," said Mayor Kasim Reed in a written statement. "I am thankful for the support of the Atlanta City Council and our partners at the United Way of Greater Atlanta, and I look forward to continued partnership as we execute this vital plan."

A Note From Councilmember Bond

Dear friends, colleagues, and constituents,

I am proud to present my legislative update through July 2017. This issue of the Resurgens newsletter focuses on key pieces of legislation that I have sponsored and co-sponsored across my past two terms.

While the Mayor's offices oversee the day to day operations of the city as the executive branch of city government, the City Council makes laws as the legislative branch. There are two types of city legislation: ordinances and resolutions. Ordinances are laws or other permanent changes made to the city's code. Resolutions create or express support for projects, and establish general policies. The city councilmembers are divided into several committees, which meet to consider and make recommendations on various ordinances and resolutions. This legislation is voted on during full council meetings. Citizens can comment on legislation during committee meetings. You can keep track of all passed and pending legislation by visiting <http://citycouncil.atlantaga.gov/legislation>.

I have introduced or co-sponsored over 1700 pieces of legislation across all of my terms since 1994 – that's more legislation per term than any other Atlanta city councilmember, living or dead. I have accomplished much more than what you will find in these pages, however what we have included is a thorough compilation of my most recent and significant work.

As always, thank you for allowing me to serve as your Post 1 At-Large Councilmember.

Michael Julian Bond

Pending Legislation: Councilmember Bond sponsored the following two major pieces of legislation, which as of publication are still being deliberated by the City Council.

17-R-4018: A resolution urging the Georgia General Assembly to limit the increase in property tax assessments for homestead properties to three percent per year.

17-O-1463: An ordinance authorizing the City to sell surplus properties to developers for $1.00 in order to facilitate the construction of affordable housing.

Bond Authors Trust Fund for Turner Field Communities Capitalized at $5 Million

In April 2017, the Atlanta City Council approved an ordinance introduced by Councilmember Michael Julian Bond to establish a trust fund to benefit the communities around Turner Field. The trust will collect a portion of the proceeds from the sale or lease of city properties in Mechanicsville, Peoplestown, Pittsburgh, Summerhill, and a portion of Grant Park. The funds will then be used to finance affordable housing, job training, and community development projects in these neighborhoods.

After Turner Field was sold to Georgia State University and a private development team, the surrounding communities raised concerns that current residents might become displaced by the changes planned for the area. Bond proposed the ordinance as a way to safeguard the communities against gentrification.

"I think it's an important first step on putting the community on a path toward community-oriented, community-controlled redevelopment and revisioning," Bond told Atlanta Progressive News. "This is one tool we hope out of many that can augment the already-established community efforts in that area."

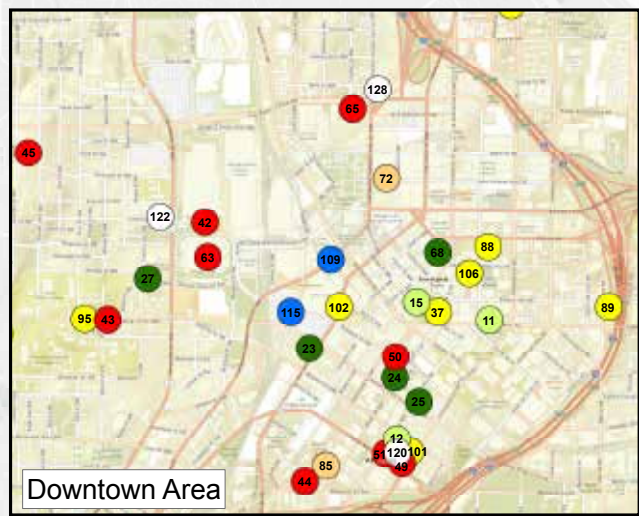

"We want to keep it community-focused, community-driven, and community-initiated," Bond continued. "We want to continue to help facilitate what the community's vision is for their own destiny."

The approval of the ordinance was a major win for the Turner Field Community Benefits Coalition, whose members have been fighting to create a Community Benefits Agreement between Georgia State University and the neighborhoods near Turner Field.

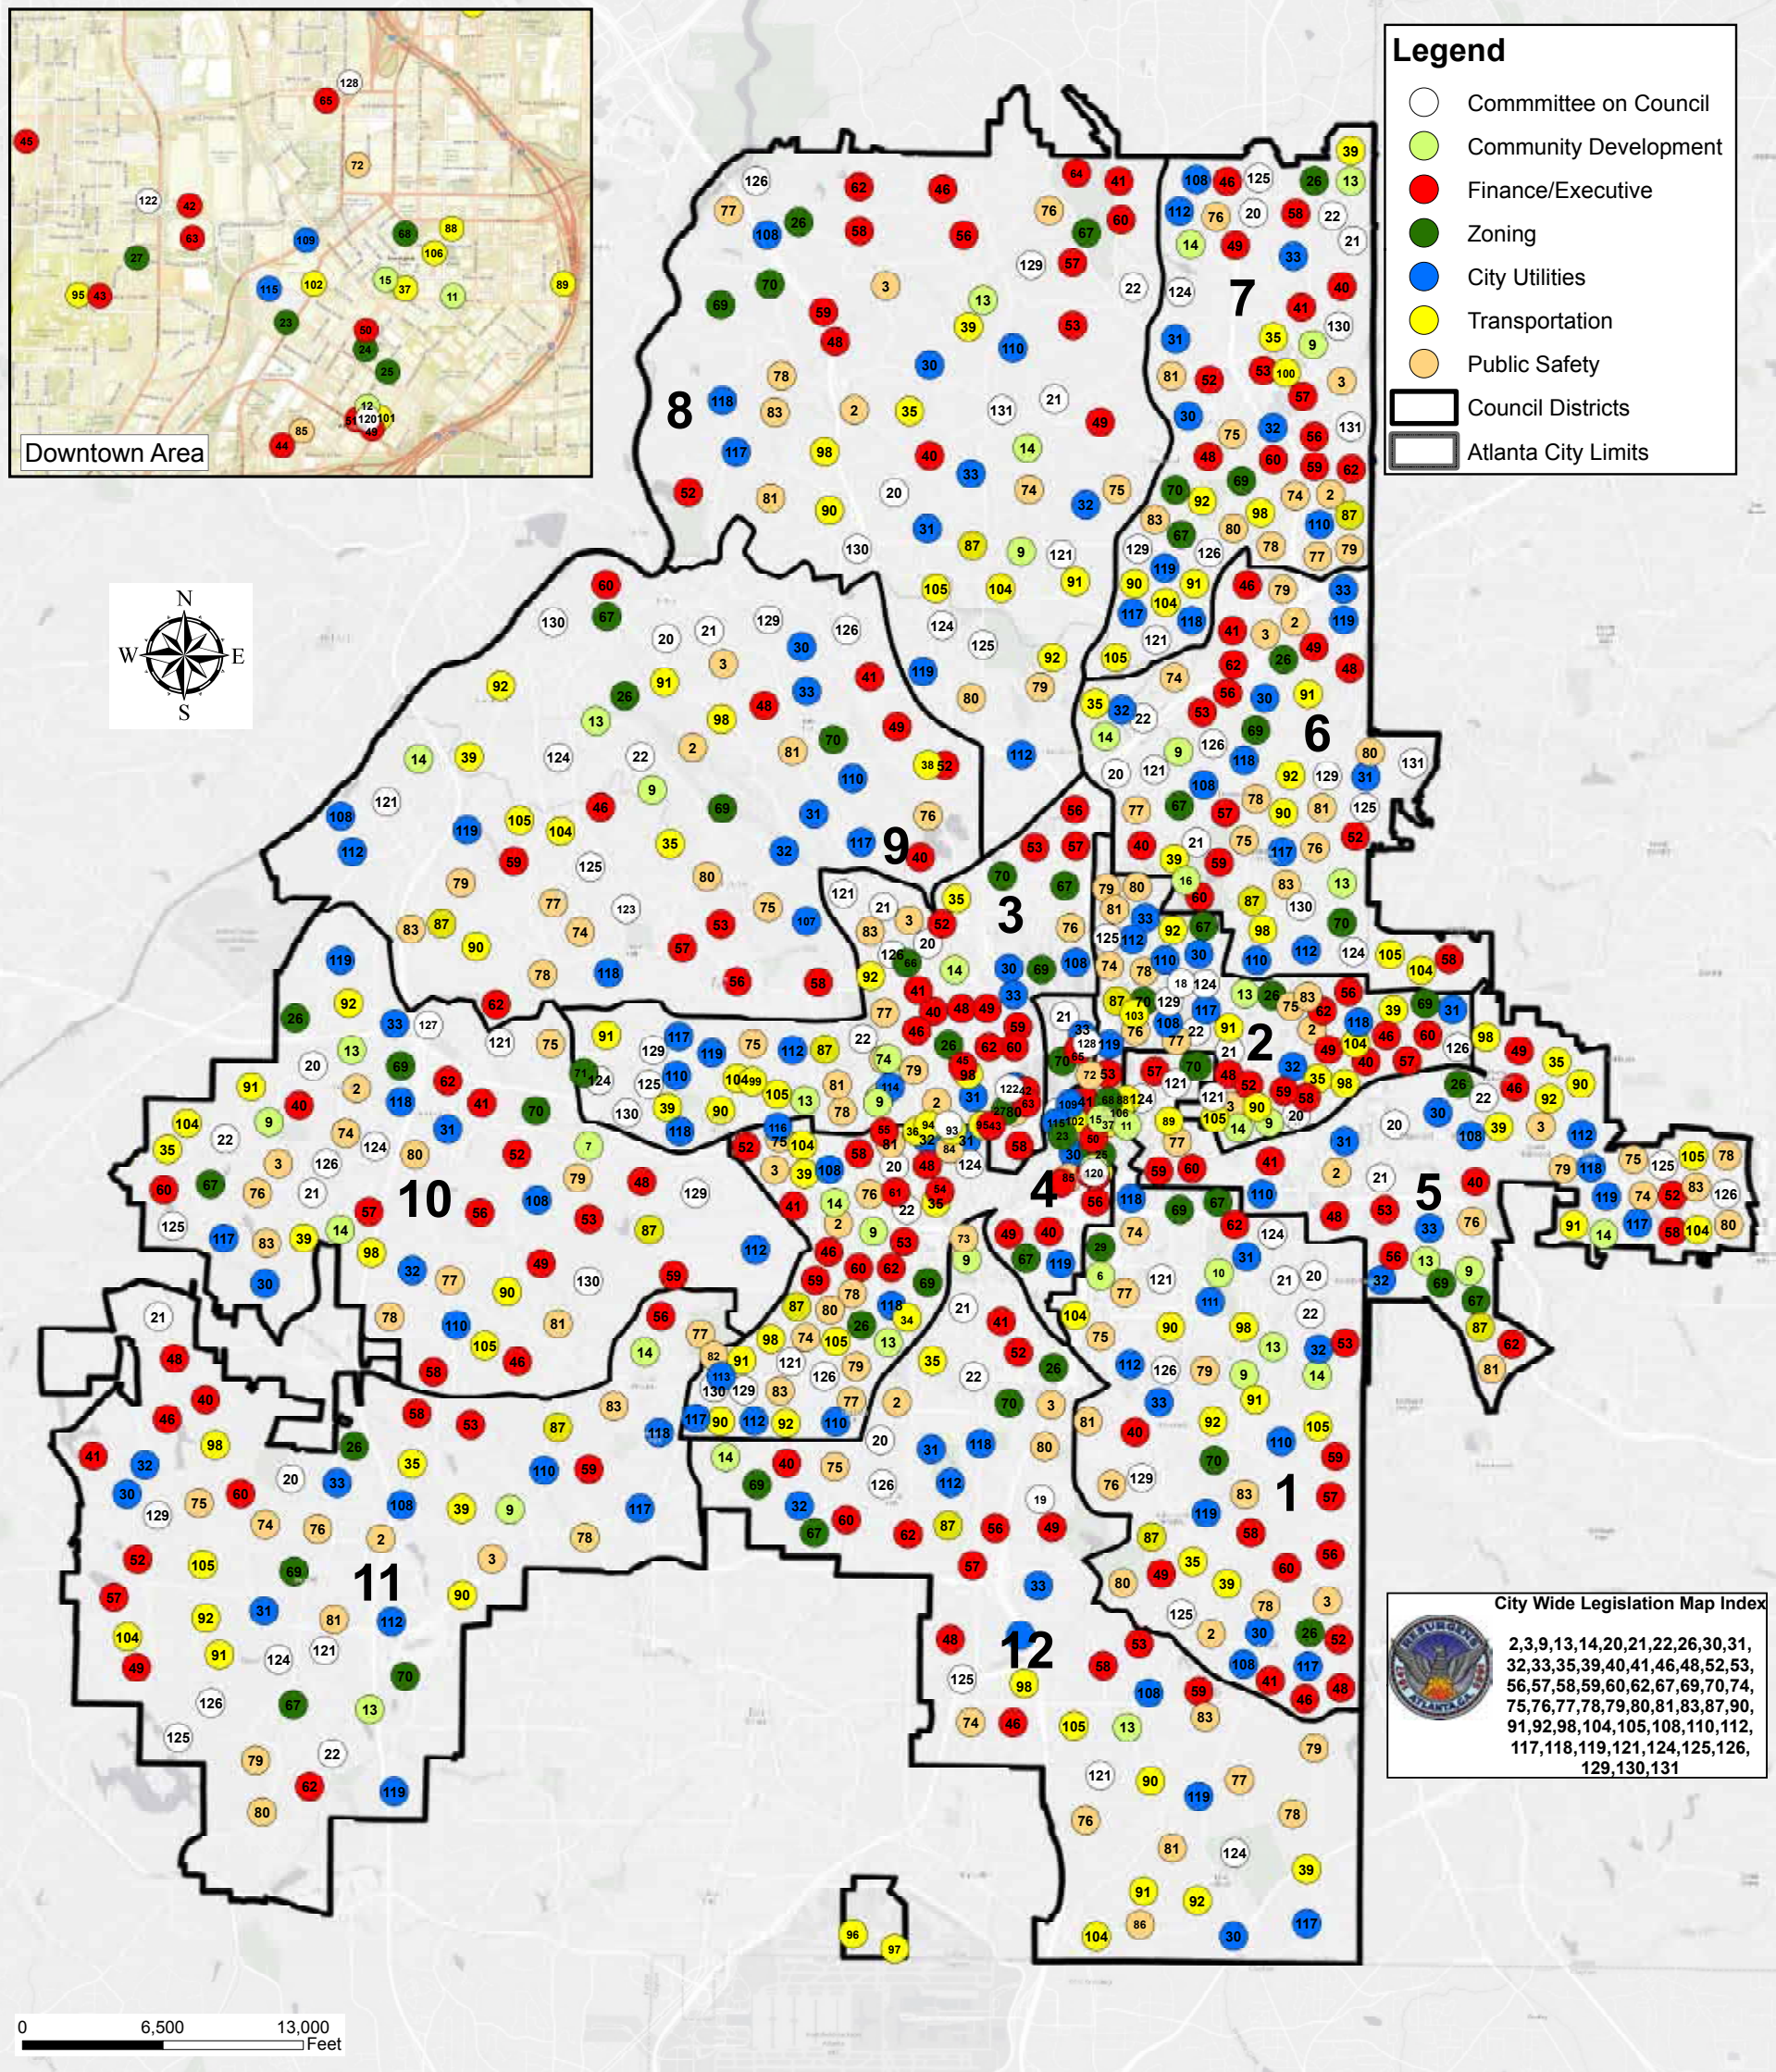

The legislation featured in this issue of Resurgens is only a small snapshot of what Councilmember Bond has worked on throughout his past two terms. Readers can request a full record of Bond's final action legislation from 2010 through mid-2017 by emailing mbond@atlantaga.gov, or calling his office at 404-330-6770.

11-O-0082 (2/7/2011) & 11-R-0081 (2/7/2011)

11-O-0082 was an ordinance by Councilmember Bond that amended the 2011 Community Development Fund budget by redistributing $713,566.81 to projects working to support the Homelessness Prevention and Rapid Re-Housing Program (HPRP) of the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA) of 2009. 11-R-0081 was another resolution by Councilmember Bond that allowed the Mayor to amend the contracts with projects working to combat homelessness so that they could receive the additional funds.

President Barack Obama signed the ARRA into law in February of 2009. The goal of the law was to create jobs, save existing jobs, provide assistance to those affected by the Great Recession and invest in the social and environmental wellbeing of the country. The HPRP was a temporary program created by the ARRA that provided grants to homelessness prevention projects around the country.

In 2009, the City of Atlanta received a grant of over $3 million from the federal department of Housing and Urban Development to support its own homelessness prevention projects. The City was required to spend at least 60% of that amount in two years or risk having the funds taken away and given to a different jurisdiction. Some of the projects that originally received the funds overestimated their ability to spend the money on time, and in 2011 the City was in danger of having its remaining funds taken away. Councilmember Bond proposed reallocating a portion of the grants to anti-homelessness projects that were spending money faster, so that the City could meet the spending requirement by the deadline.

The Montford Point Marines were the first African Americans to serve in the U.S. Marine Corps. They were trained in segregated facilities in Montford Point Camp, North Carolina from 1942 to 1949. The camp was deactivated in 1949 after President Truman desegregated the military with an executive order, however its trainees went on to distinguish themselves in a variety of military engagements. SB 1695 was introduced by Senator Roland Burris (D-Illinois); the same bill was introduced in the House by Representative Corrine Brown (D-Florida) as HR 3927. The Marines were honored with the Congressional Gold Medal in 2012.

11-R-1416 was a resolution by Councilmember Bond, Councilmember Alex Wan, and Councilmember Kwanza Hall that authorized relevant city departments, organizations, and neighborhood associations to conduct a parking and traffic control study for the streets and neighborhoods near Piedmont Park.
